John Bemelmans Marciano is the grandson of Ludwig Bemelmans, author of the original Madeline books. He lives in Brooklyn, New York.

LOVE THIS! I love that this young readers book is actually by John Bemelmans Marciano (who I believe is the grandson of the Madeline creator). You can tell from the quality of the art and the writing that it's the real deal. Great reading exposure in a portable small format, but still authentic and wonderful Madeline.

This is a lovely addition to the Madeline group of books. As all those following the original, it begins with the typical "In an old house it Paris all covered with vines. . .", but then begins a new adventure.

This one introduces Pepito in which he tries to ruin the darling tea party hosted by Madeline. Sweet story and musical rhymes, as usual. It is not a hard cover book like many others; it is the less expensive paper version, but the price reflects it.

This book is a wonderful leveled reader. I love the penguin readers for my daughter who is in Kindergarten. This story is simple for the advanced Kindergartner to read and also has a storyline that can keep the kids interested. I hope they make more of these. The ending is very sweet and talks about forgiving a friend.

My granddaughter loves it and likes to have it read over and over.

This is a very small paperback. Paperback children's books are fine with me but this edition is awfully small. That makes it harder to read it to a child while showing the pictures.

great Madeline book

Love this book as well as Madeline and her Dog. My daughter has read both of these dozens of times. This book is just the right kind of challenge for a first grader and it still has a plot to it that makes it a wonderful story. I really hope they add more Madeline books to this series!

I ordered this along with a Madeline doll as a gift for my granddaughter. I made a dress from a knit fabric for the doll so she looked like Madeline in this story. My GD loved it so much her mom found her the next morning in the living room watching TV with the doll and her "party" dress on her lap. GD loves to read and especially loves the Madeline series.
