'A fantastic book. We visited Rome for 5 days and this book ended up being far more useful than any of our guidebooks. My 8-year old loved this, as did I.' - Deborah S. Anderson 'This is a must have series for those of you traveling with kids! My 11 year old had such a great time in Rome using the book to find all the items at each location. Best of all our oldest son was home on college break and it was so great watching him help her hunt for the items at each location. That was priceless! I love that not only are these great for the kids but that I learn new things as well.' - Mrs. B. 'My daughters (ages 7 and 9) are so excited to use this when we go to Europe...a terrific idea of having the kids earn a certain number of points for each landmark they find, with the goal of getting to 100. Highly recommend!' - DLS87

We looked for ways to keep our 9 year old interested during our family trip to Italy while we took many tours to explore the city! He absolutely loved this, and it kept him engaged and interested during the tours. Our tour guide even went out of her way to help him find things in the book.

We are currently in Rome using our mission book and we are LOVING it! All 4 of our kids (6, 8, 11, & 13) are having a blast looking for details and learning about the city of Rome. I couldn't have picked a better way to do the city. We have traveled many places in Europe and this book has given the kids a way to remember what they've seen and learned. It certainly makes it feel as if the trip was worth it for them as well. I only wish we had learned about this book before we visited London and Paris! We will be purchasing any city mission book for cities we visit in the future!

I love these books! My kids are 12, 14 and 16 so I was afraid they might think they were "baby" books but they are enjoying them. I just wish there were books for London and Berlin.

I got this for a trip to Rome when my daughter was 6. It helped to keep her entertained at some major tourist sites where she would have ordinarily been bored. In fact, we ended up staying longer at some places because she really wanted to find more items. I would say this is a good book for kids in elementary school. The older kids can do the scavenger hunts on their own. The younger kids will need you to read it for them if they aren't yet fluent readers. I enjoyed doing some of the activities with my daughter. It got me to notice some things I definitely would have missed otherwise, such as the drainage system in the Pantheon. I also like that the book is thin and light and packs easily.

Mission Rome is the third "Mission" book our family has completed (last summer we completed Amsterdam and Paris). We traveled with four children, ages seven to twelve. The Mission books give the kids a sense of purpose when we travel and distract them when they get cranky. We use metro rides or lunchtime to preview the next area that we're headed to and read the information in the book. I'll admit that occasionally the adults have to pull their interest in, but we motivate them to find all of the points with promises of gelato. They get pretty excited when they find what they're looking for. I appreciate how the books painlessly weave learning into the tasks so the kids are picking up a little history as they go. We only wish that there were more Mission books available.

If you have tween kids and are heading to Rome, this book is a godsend. Let's face it, churches and museums aren't that interesting when you're a kid, but this book's "missions" are just comprehensive enough to keep an 8-11 year old occupied at most of the city's famous sites, while not overwhelming him or her with information. Our daughter is 9 (and 1/2, as she reminds everyone) and has been racing around the city trying to amass as many points as possible. We definitely have seen some things that I doubt we would have without the information in this book. Take, for instance, the obelisk in the Piazza della Minerva around the corner from the Pantheon. Do you know what animal is supporting this particular obelisk? Neither would our family, if not for Mission Rome! While seemingly designed for tweens, I think this book would also be a great buy for slightly older or younger kids. The older ones might act like they're too cool, but I'm betting they'd get some useful information and amusement from it while the younger ones would definitely enjoy it, perhaps just a bit less independently from their parents.

Kids loved it! They had tons of fun looking for things when we were in Europe and I do think that it made the trip much more fun for them, except some of the things were incredibly hard to find and my kids are a bit stubborn and would not leave until they found all the items ! Also some areas required paid extra into extra parts of the museums etc

The absolute BEST book to keep kids engaged. We had a family vacation with 7 kids ages from 6 to 15. EVERYONE participated. We divided into teams. Initially we incentivised by offering $20 for participating. By the end of the trip they completely forgot about the incentive. I as the parent enjoyed it just as much. We all learned more than if we had just gone to the sights. I told every family with kids and high school groups about this book. An absolute MUST BUY!
